

On this Day

Jamie McCallum

On this day our voices join the crowds in Jerusalem as we worship Jesus Christ as Savior and King. To the One who has defeated the powers of sin, darkness, oppression, and even death; To the One who has called us righteous, the light of the world, and living heirs and friends of God, we join that crowd and proclaim, Hosanna to the Son of the David! Thank you Christ, for saving me. Praises be to your name in the highest heaven and even on earth!

To the One who comes riding on the donkey as people bow and clear the way; To the One who brings kings to their knees in worship, kingdoms to ruins while yours remains; To Jesus Christ whose life on earth was the fullness of wisdom, strength, power, and glory, we join that crowd and proclaim,

Blessed is he who comes in the name of the Lord! King Jesus, be king of my life this day. Praises be to your name in the highest heaven and even on earth!

And with the crowds whose praises would soon turn to cursing we realize we still stand in their place. When his salvation reaches even those we despise, when his lordship demands all of our lives, when his glory is a call for our humility, when his living calls for our dying, we too wonder if there could be another way.

And yet this day, the best we know how, we choose your way, O Christ. Though we know we cannot see the whole of who you are, and we cannot comprehend the fullness of what you have done and will do, we choose your way. From our humble hearts, hear us proclaim,

Hosanna to the Son of David! Thank you, Christ, for saving me. Blessed is he who comes in the name of the Lord! King Jesus, you are my king. Praises be to your name in the highest heaven and even on earth, we pray.
Amen.
