

Our Hope is in You

Jamie McCallum

Now faith is the assurance of things hoped for, the conviction of things not seen. And so, I ask, what is our hope?

We hope for a day when our faith will be sight.

I hope for a day when God's Kingdom is all we will know- when all people and all created things will be just as they were created to be.

We hope for a place where the sins, tears, and burdens we carry will be no more.

I hope for this church to be a place where sinners humbly confess, tears are wiped away, and burdens are lifted- even here and even now.

We hope for the day we will be fully alive in the presence of our God.

I hope for your aliveness in God to begin this day.

These are our hopes.

And you can rest assured they are coming to be.
And what is the unseen conviction you hold?

We believe the Living Spirit of God meets us here. We believe He knows each heart and has a work to do in us all. We believe our worship is for Him. And we believe He is always for us.

I believe God is actively bringing about his perfect kingdom. I believe Jesus meant it when he said he would not leave us as orphans. And I believe that the life I share with my God today is but a glimpse of the eternal love I will one day know in full.

Yes- some days we struggle to see these things, but this is what we believe.

And you can rest assured they are coming to be.

Come quickly, Lord Jesus, we pray. Our hope is in you.